In the past, it was common for FFL dealers to record their acquisitions and dispositions by hand in paper bound books (hence the term "bound book" to refer to your A&D records). This method still works, but it's not ideal for modern businesses.

Why You Can't Keep Firearms Acquisition and Disposition ...

A&D records track all of the firearms that an FFL has received or made (acquired) and each of those firearms that the FFL has either sold, transferred, or destroyed (dispositions). Your A&D records not only show the history of your gun business, they also are what the ATF will use to conduct an inventory during an ATF compliance inspection.

Best FFL Software for A&D Records - RocketFFL

The Gun Control Act of 1968 requires FFLs to keep and maintain acquisition and disposition records throughout course of business. The type of information an FFL needs to keep and the duration for which they need to keep it depends on the type of license. An importer must maintain different information than a standard dealer, for instance.
